RESEARCH

See listings below of some 300 publications (books, monographs, articles, chapters, reprints and translations). Subjects include criminological theory, psychology of crime, terrorism, suicide, burglary, vandalism, robbery, vehicle theft, crime prevention, police effectiveness, effectiveness of penal treatment, institutional regimes, evaluation methodology, research and policy.

Apart from the personal research represented in these publications, I have supervised large programs of research for the Home Office on the police, on crime prevention and on institutional treatment regimes. I was also closely involved in launching the British Crime Survey in 1982. The survey is a nationally-representative sample and is now repeated every year.

Reviews of my scholarly and research career can be found in: Tilley, N. and Farrell, G. (2011) The Reasoning Criminologist: Essays in Honour of Ronald V Clarke. London and New York: Routledge.
